Pisces

This ritual is for home, family, and emotional roots.

There is a kind of knowing that lives not in the mind but in the bones — the knowledge of where you came from, and what it means to finally feel at home in that.

PREPARATION

Face north. Before you settle, walk briefly through your home — not to clean it, but to feel it: the rooms, the corners, the places that hold memory. Return to your space and soften it rather than perfect it: a folded blanket, a cushion, something that says settled rather than staged. Silence all devices and let piano and rain sounds fill the quiet if the quiet feels too empty. Pour a cup of warm chamomile or jasmine tea, hold it close to your face and breathe the steam before drinking, and take one slow, warming sip that feels like arriving. Close your eyes and picture the people who made you — your family of origin, chosen family, those who are gone but still felt — and let that feeling of rootedness travel from your feet upward through your chest. Open your eyes only when you feel located, known, and held. The ritual begins now.

THE RITUAL

Light the sea green candle and sit with your hands in your lap, eyes open, simply looking at the flame for one full minute as it settles — let this be the moment you give yourself full permission to be soft, still, and completely present to the life you have built and the love that roots you.

Hold a few dried or fresh jasmine flowers in your palms and breathe in deeply, letting the sweet and deeply familiar scent travel all the way down, and with your eyes closed picture your home as a living, breathing thing that holds and shelters you through all its seasons.

Hold the moonstone in both hands and name, silently or aloud, the three people — living or passed — who have most shaped the feeling of home inside you, sitting with each name long enough to feel its weight and its warmth under this Gemini full moon.

Place the moonstone at the base of the sea green candle and scatter the jasmine petals around it, each one placed with the quiet intention of deepening your roots and nourishing the connections that make you who you are.

Let the candle burn while the rain and piano play, and when you extinguish it, carry the moonstone to the heart of your home — the kitchen, the threshold, wherever feels most alive — and leave it there as a keeper of the warmth you have called in tonight.
