

FULL MOON IN LIBRA · THURSDAY, 1 MARCH 2029

Sagittarius

This ritual is about friendships, community, and the future you are building alongside others.

Every future worth having was first imagined in the company of people who were willing to believe in it together — and the Full Moon in Libra asks who those people are for you.

PREPARATION

Face south. South carries the energy of warmth, of midday, of full expansion — and that is the spirit this ritual asks you to bring to your community and your future. Open the space up if you can: let some air in, move something to the side, create a sense of room. Let the music begin before you sit down, because this ritual benefits from entering an atmosphere rather than building one from scratch. Pour yourself something generous: a full glass of wine, a large mug of tea, the kind of pour you would give someone you love. Hold it and think of a person in your circle who matters — take a sip as if they were there. Close your eyes and picture the future you and your people are building together: the projects, the gatherings, the specific texture of a life lived in good company. Stay until it glows. Open your eyes when the vision feels like direction. The ritual begins now.

THE RITUAL

Light the purple candle and let it represent not just your own vision, but the collective light of everyone who is moving toward something alongside you, named or unnamed.

Bundle or loose-burn the sage and move it slowly through your space — not as a cleansing of negativity, but as a blessing of your future, a fragrant act of making room for what is coming.

Hold the lapis lazuli in your dominant hand and speak aloud the names — as many as come naturally — of people in your community who are part of your genuine, real-life future, letting each name be a small act of recognition and gratitude.

Set the lapis lazuli in front of the purple candle and write or speak one specific future goal — not vague, but dated, shaped, with texture — that you are committing to pursue with the support of your people under this Sagittarius full moon in Libra.

Close by holding the lapis lazuli once more, then setting it down deliberately — this stone stays on your altar or near your bed until the goal it witnessed is real, a small visible reminder that you said it out loud and the universe heard.
